The Man-Eating Tree.

Bowen built.

Dr, Jay writes from Madagascar to tightly toward each other from their the South Australian Register: If interstices, there trickled down the you can imagine a pineapple, eight stalk of the tree great streams of the feet high and thick in proportion, viscid honey-like fluid, mingled horresting upon its base, and denuded of ribly with the blood and oozing viscera that hunted the mouse that hid in the leaves, you will have a good idea of of the victim. At sight of this the meel that lay in the house that Bowen the trunk of the tree, which, however, savage hordes around me, yelling was not the color of an anana, but a madly bounded forward, crowded to dark, dingy, brown, and apparently as hard as iron. From the apex of lcaves, hands and tongues, each one this frustrated come (at least two feet obtained enough of the liquid to send in diameter) eight huge leaves sheer him mad and frantic. to the ground, like doors swung back on their hinges, These leaves, which were joined at the top of the tree at regular intervals, were about eleven or twelve feet long, and shaped very much like the leaves of an American agave or century plant. They are two feet through in their thickest point and three feet wide, tapering to angry heel that kicked till the dog a sharp point that looked like a cow's horn, very convex on the outer (but of those men who stand on the edge that hunted the mouse that hid in the now under surface) and on the under (now upper) surface slightly concave. This concave face was thickly set with strong thorny hooks like those upon the head of the teazle. The leaves, hanging thus limp and lifeless, deadgreen in color, and in appearance the massive strength of oak fibre. The apex of the cone was a round, white, concave figure, like a smaller plate set within a larger one. This was not a flower, but a receptacle, and there exuded it into a clear treacly liquid honey, sweet, and possessed of violent intoxicating and soporific properties. From underneath the rim (so to speak) of the undermost plate a series of long, hairy, green tendrils stretched out in every direction toward the horizon. These were seven or eight feet long, and tapered from four inches to a half inch in diameter, yet they stretched out stiffly as iron rods. Above these (from between the upper and under cup) six white, almost transparent palpi reared themselves toward the sky, twirling and twisting the law, and I ought to fine you with a marvellous incessant motion, $700." yet constantly reaching upward. With still wilder shricks and chants Mrs. Morse.-This is the typical they now surrounded one of the women mother-in-law with the terrible tongue and urged her with points of their and flexible jaw, the cagle eye and javolins until slowly, and with despairavenging claw, who told of all she ing face, she climbed up the stalk of heard and saw, who indulged in the tree and stood on the summit of various comments aloud, and made it the cone, the palpi swirling all about sultry for all the crowd-for the Mu- her. But she did not jump down, as she seemed intend to do. Oh, no! The atrocious cannibal tree, that had been so inert and dead, came to suddea savage life. The slender delicate palpi with the fury of starved serpents, quivered a moment over her head, then, as if instinct with demoniac intelligence, fastened upon her in sudden coils round and round her neck will crow in the morn when Justice and arms, and while her awful screams and yet more awful laughter green serpents, with brutal energy and infernal rapidity, rose, contracted cruel swiftness and savage tenacity of

The Hackman in Court.

'Your name is-is-what?, asked he Court.

'Davey, sir-George Davey.' 'And you work at-what?' 'Drive hack.'

'Ah-ha!' smiled his Honor, ac quiring sudden interest; 'this is worth twenty dollars to me. You are one of the walk at the depots and shout 'Hax!' at people.'

'I have to git passengers, sir.' 'Don't sass me back, Mr. Davey-I known all about you! Only the other day, as I returned from a Mayday party in the country, there were one million five hundred and sixty-five thousand three hundred and ninety two of you on the curb stone, and every one of you yelled 'Hax!' at me, One seized my satchel, another grabbed at my coat, and another pulled me backward by the coat tails.

l believe you are that man!' ''Deed, sir, I haint.' 'Well, it's barely possible that I am mistaken, but here's a charge that you were lying on the walk drunk.' 'I wasn't, sir; I was sitting up alongside a house." 'That's too fine a point to argue. Vere you drunk?'

Only sprung, sir; only a little prung. 'That's just as bad in the sight of

'Grashus? but I could never pay

'No; my object would be to keep bodaciously from him.'

'Oh, let up on a feller,' pleaded the prisoner. 'This is the first time, and it shall be the last. I've a large family, sir, and they need my wages to get their bread.'

His Honor took a long time to think, and then replied:

'It is wrong to let you off. The citizens will condemn me, and the newspapers will blow at me, but I believe I'll give you a show- You may go, but I shall keep watch of you. You must mend your ways right off. Instead of yelling 'Hax!' at a man, do you smile, and softly whisper: 'sir, can I have the pleasure of conveying you to some designated point?' Promise me this?'

The prisoner promised, and was allowed to disappear, limping sadly with

An Exciting Contest.

Last winter two of my neighbors, Mr. Miller and Mr. Grant, lost their wives upon the same day, and both of the funerals took place three days afterward, the interments being made at the cemetery about the same hour. As the two funeral parties were coming out of the burying ground, Miller met Grant, and clasping each other's hand they indulged in a sympathetic squeeze, and the following conversation ensued:

Miller .- 'I'm sorry for you, It's an inspeakable loss isn't it?' Grant - 'Awful! She was the best woman that ever lived," Miller .- 'She was indeed. I never

Grant .- 'I was referring to my wife. There couldn't be two best you Miller .- 'Yes, I know. I know well enough that your wite couldn't hold a candle to mine.'

Grant .- 'She couldn't, hey? Couldn't hord a candle. Why she could dance all round Mrs. Miller every day in the week including Sundays, and not half try! She was an unmitigated angel take her any way you would."

Miller.-'Oh, she was, was she? Well I don't want to be personal but if I owned a cross eyed angel with red hair and no teeth, and as bony as an omnibus horse, I'd kill her if she didn't die of her own accord. Dance! How could a woman dance that had feet like candle boxes, and lame at Graut. - Better be cross-eyed than wear the kind of a red nose that your wife flourished around this comm nity. I bet it'll burn a hole through the coffin lid. And you pretend you're sorry she's stepped out! But you can't impose on me! I know you're so glad you can hardly hold in. She was the chuckle-headedst woman that ever disgraced a graveyard; that's what she was.' Miller .- 'If you abuse my wife, I'll knock the head off of you.'

Grant .- 'I'd like to see you try it.' Then the two disconsolate widowers engaged in a hand-to-hand combat, and after fighting awhile in the snow the mourners pulled them apart just as Mr. Miller was about to insist upon his wife's virtues by biting off Mr. Grant's nose.

Bill Malone.

In these stagrant times people should be grateful for anything that will provoke a smile. Two old colored ladies met recently in a grocery store in Columbia, and, while making their purchases, of course "talked church."

'Well,' said one, 'Brother Goldin has lost his house.' 'Why, how he lose it?' asked the other.

'Well, you know he borrowed money outen that 'sociation, whatever you call it, that lends money (building and loan suggested a bystander); that's it. Well, he got the money outen him, and failed to pay it back, you know, so you see this-what's his name? (building and loan again suggested)-comes down hot on Brother Go ding, and takes the place the countenance of the listening sister had been expressive only of a police interest and mournful christian sympathy in the misfortunes of Brother Goldin; but when the speaker went on to say: 'And now Brother Goldin wants we members of the church to fling in and pay the debt for him,' à fearful change came over that intelligent face-her eyes flashed fire.

'He do,' Re cried emphatically, placing her hands upon her hips, and striking a determined attitude, 'he do, does he? Well, I can jist tell you one thing: I yearns all I git, and ef Bill Malone never gits paid for that house tell he gits it outen Marider, he'll never git it while his head's hot. Whose Bill Malone, I'd like to know,' she continued, lashing herself into a fury, 'that he can't wait for his money as well as other people? He's some hereticle old orbeliever, or he wouldn't be so hard down on a member of the church; but he'll brile for it hereafter, that's one comfort.' And gathering up her bundles-not in her indignation forgetting one-she tossed her head and marched out of the store. When last heard from she was still abusing 'old Bill Malone.'

How to Calculate Interest and What is Will do.

The following rules are so simple and so true according to all business usage, that every banker, broker, merchant or clerk should post them up for reference. There being no such thing as a fraction in it, there is scarcely any liability to error or misnet her equal. She was a good wife take. By no other arithmetical process can the desired information be obtained by so few figures:

Six per cent-Multiply any given diliber of dollars by the number of days of interest desired, separate the right hand figure and divide by six; the result is the true interest on such number of days at six per cent.

Eight per cent-Multiply any given amount for the number of days upon which it is desired to ascertain the interest, and divide by forty-five, and the result will be the interest of such sum for the time required, at eight per cent.

What it will do. If a mechanic or clerk saves only 21 cents a day, from the time he is twenty-one until he is threescore and ten, the aggregate, with interest, will amount to $2,900; and a daily saving of 974 cents reaches the important sum of $59,000. A sixpence saved daily will provide a sum of $7,000—sufficient to purchase a good farm.

There are few employers who cannot save daily, by abstaining from the use of cigars, tobacco, liquor, etc., twice or ten times the amount of the six cent piece. Every person should provide for old age, and the man in business who can save a dollar a day will eventually find himself possessed of over $100,000.

'It isn't so very late-only a quarter of twelve.' 'How dare you sit there and tell that lie? I was awake when you came in, and looked at my watch -it was three o'clock. 'Well, isn't three a quarter of twelve.
